Dear Friends,

Good Greetings,

I would like to take this opportunity to congratulate all of you and all Iraqis and Americans for the historic moment of the passing of the Troop Withdrawal Agreement between Iraq and the United States—in absolute majority in the Iraqi Council of Representatives.

This remarkable point in time will plot a new chapter in our Iraqi-American strategic relationship. It takes place on November 27th, 2008, coinciding with a great American holiday: Thanksgiving, a day in which we can come closer and develop stronger ties for the future of our countries' interests.

We, Iraqis, will keep remembering the great sacrifices that the American people presented for the cause of Iraqi freedom and democracy. Today's historic moment is just an example that we, as Iraqis, intend to go forward in our fulfillment to our devoted friendship with the United States.

On such a great day for both countries' history, I wish all of you and every Iraqi and American all the happiness and success.

All the best and Happy Thanksgiving.
